DAYLESFORD BEGONIAS

WOMBAT HILL BOTANIC GARDENS CONSERVATORY

After viewing the Tuberous Begonias in the Fitzroy Gardens Conservatory, then Ballarat Botanical Gardens Conservatory. Then onto Daylesford, Wombat Hill Botanic Gardens Conservatory.

The gardens have a long history of growing Tuberous Begonias. The collection was started by W Cascoigne, the curator from 1885. Off and on over the years various curators grew and displayed the Tuberous Begonias.

The current Head Gardener and garden staff are carrying on the tradition. There is no nursery staff to maintain the collection. Most of the Begonias are un-named, labels lost!

The repairs to the Conservatory took the Council 6 years to get around to repairing the building, roof does not leak now! The two glasshouses in the gardens depot, have been condemned and cannot be used, so no propagation and space to grow anything!!

Unfortunately Parks and Gardens are not high on the Council's bureaucrats list. But the garden staff do their best to grow and maintain this collection of Tuberous Begonias.
